

CHAT NOTES – October 5, 2014

from Michael to Everyone:

Given that we don't need to live in a world of frozen artifacts, might it also be true that we cannot experience the dynamic of time except through its presentations--perhaps similar to the fathoming of vision through our efforts to embody it. In other words can we unfreeze positions while still relying on time appearing in a realm that we inhabit as living beings.

from Soudabeh Azizi to Everyone:

his analogy of that momentum being like a airplane's moving vs, being in it (being in dynamic of time) is very helpful

from Ron to Everyone:

Good parallel!

from Soudabeh Azizi to Everyone:

Rinpoche's last paragraph on page 61 reminded me of the time of meditations that I am attuned with what is presented by time... the speed of life being presented matches the frequency of my receiving it and appreciating it... and that language that he describes it is of traditional language that I am familiar and I get it much easier ..

from Ron to Everyone:

Closer than close.

from Soudabeh Azizi to Everyone:

it seems more is about stripping layers of internal, mental doings ..and more becoming attuned with our all that cognitive business...

from Eliana Kalaf to Everyone:

To connect to the aliveness of time I have to bring an allowing quality, allow to be touched by time. I need to open the door connecting inside and outside. When this door is open I can perceive a mixture of textures, as a good perfume has a mixture of scents. Light, ease and familiar.

from John to Everyone:

Time's dynamic power is the body of the ocean- and clock time and all manifestations are surface appearances and I could experience both with a renewed distinction and sense of fluidity.

from ken to Everyone:

Might not access be found in entering the world of "needs to be done", being in the world as a beckoning task to be done?

from Ron to Everyone:

You gave me a good acronym for a daily time koan. MODYN. Distinguishing and remembering momentum from the dynamic.

from Michael to Everyone:

I'm like a spider weaving a thread of personal agendas, wishes, and attempts to strengthen an identity--out of the energy of dynamic time--and then discover myself living in a web of my own making.

from Ron to Everyone:

Anxiety urgency vs an inspired urgency

from klaus noldes to Everyone:

being in the dynamic of time, the flow of time disappears. Flow can only appear to something positioned from Karin Tommack to Everyone:

getting aware of different temporal orders of the other people in the room, where I am just sitting - also in the chat room. Does everyone engage in different an order??

from Ron to Everyone:

Not just a mental construct.

from Ron to Everyone:

Language is not the enemy.

from Michael to Everyone:

following up on Karin's observation, is it possible that we can see the order in a more flexible way through empathy with the experience of others? Might our dedication to our personal perspectives become more transparent? Joanne I say your remark.

from ken to Everyone:

Look who's talking!

from ken to Everyone:

Or: Look, who is talking.

from ken to Everyone:

Yes.

from Ron to Everyone:

Yes?
