

Chat Notes: June 7, 2015

from John to Everyone:

Inquiry suggests constant action in a particular direction. But there is also the question of 'being' the vision. Resting in the depth of being and well-being of Time and Space. This is perhaps deeper than the inquiry aspect?

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:

One need not insist on task to do task inquiry.

from John to Everyone:

Inquiry can be an exploration of 'energy' of 'fields' as well, not dependent on mentation or questions

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:

Experience as metaphor?

from Karin to Everyone:

ongoing wondering

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:

Experience as evocative.

from michael to Everyone:

Like a metaphor, experience can point to a more living, interconnected realm than our literal interpretations from Hayward Fox to Everyone:

i can attune to the presence of space in experience

from michael to Everyone:

I wonder if enjoyment is still the best guide of what is worthwhile embracing and including in our lives. Not to pursue pleasure for its own sake, but if a sense of fulfillment doesn't reward our interests and intentions, perhaps we have reason to reevaluate what we are doing and emphasizing.

from David Filippone to Everyone:

I relax and look at my thinking... I see levels happening, surface stories, their circular nature, putting me at the center, in time. I see usually unnoticed value system operating below them, what's felt to be good or bad for me at the time, how I filter current experience through past stories. There are deeper levels available...

from Eliana Kalaf to Everyone:

For me the inquiry is really activated when I am open and aware. It seems that in this way knowledge makes itself available. I have to be very gentle. If any kind of effort is present, all that I can get is the same old stuff.

from John to Everyone:

I like what Michael is saying. Perhaps joy is the essence of inquiry - the inquiry of Knowledge into Time and Space. That is resting in the well-being of Time and Space, while we are active. Being in the joy of Time and Space living us.

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:

The thing is dull, the mirror is bright, and where else does the thing appear? The mirror, bright and open, even dullness.

from klaus noldes to Everyone:

to become joyful might be the best way, that people become interested in TSK.

from michael to Everyone:

I wonder what the mirror is that it can reflect more than it is receiving. Is that image, Ken, a greater knowledge reflecting our limited images of a source of knowing, which is also able to reflect?

from klaus noldes to Everyone:
joy isn't abstract

from Eliana Kalaf to Everyone:
I see that for me joy comes when knowledge becomes itself available, not before

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:
To Michael, yes.

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:
Answer : You can't. Response: Great Laughter.

from ken mckeeon to Everyone:
Being always joy